Meet Nicole A. Bloor, MD

Nicole Bloor, MD, serves as president of the Hallmark Health System (HHS) Medical Staff. She is board-certified in internal medicine.

What motivated you to become a physician?

From as young as I can remember I wanted to be a veterinarian but when I went to college I volunteered at a local clinic to do phlebotomy and microscopy.

Why did you choose to specialize in internal medicine?

My first love was obstetrics. Delivering babies was such fun, but I came to love the complexity and intellectual challenge of medicine. It was the continuity of care of patients that most appealed to me. That is why I chose internal medicine instead of subspecializing.

As president of the Medical Executive Committee for HHS, how would you describe your colleagues who practice at HHS?

I believe the medical staff at HHS is second-to-none. Each day, I am impressed with the knowledge, high-level skills, experience and compassion that you find throughout our medical staff.

Most recently, I have been impressed with their enthusiasm and dedication for improving patient safety and satisfaction at HHS. These initiatives can be challenging because they require multi-disciplinary collaboration and can create significant change in practice patterns. Yet, I see our physicians accepting and embracing these challenges and being successful.

What do you do for fun when you are not taking care of your patients?

I am an avid gardener and have recently become very interested in beekeeping.
